Winning Cowboy to Get Trophy by Jo Mora

The trophy that is to be presented to the cowboy who wins it three times at the California rodeo in Salinas was completed this week by Jo Mora in his Pebble Beach studio. The trophy stands ten inches high and pictures a bucking horse, ridden by a cowboy with reins in one hand and hat in the other.

It will take the place of the famous "Roosevelt trophy" which was won last year. The cowboy who obtains the highest points at the Salinas rodeo each time in three years, will be awarded the trophy.

French Poppies To Help World War's Wounded

Poets and song writers have made the poppy an inseparable memory in connection with tributes to the Nation's dead. When the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States back in 1922 introduced to America poppies made in France, the public immediately gave recognition to the ideals that these poppies symbolized. The demand for additional poppies the following year became so great it was necessary to have them produced in this country.

This brought about the plan to have V. F. W. Buddy poppies made by disabled veterans, who were still in hospitals incapacitated by wounds and illness as a result of their war service. Because of the pleasure as well as the direct physical and financial benefits derived from the manufacture and sales of the poppies the unfortunate disabled veterans who were engaged in this congenial task applied the name "BUDDY" poppy, a name which has become nationally recognized.

The unimpeachable character of the sale in its every respect is attested by the annual public endorsement it receives from the president of the United States. The plan has also been endorsed by the general federation of Women's Clubs and by State federations; William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor; Fraternal Organizations; religious leaders; and business and professional organizations of National importance, as well as by our local public officials, civic and service clubs, business and professional organizations, and fraternal and welfare societies who have joined hands in endorsing and supporting the V. F. W. Buddy poppy drive.

"Pack up your troubles in your old kit bag and smile, smile, smile" is the keynote of the spirit in which throughout the United States disabled and needy veterans are working these days to make the thousands on thousands of scarlet poppies which will gleam in significant tribute in the button holes of all America on memorial day, so buy a V. F. W. Buddy poppy and "Honor the dead by serving the living."

FISHERMAN FALLS INTO CANYON DOWN COAST

Falling fifty feet to the rock floor of Box Canyon, three miles above Pfeieffer's resort, Chester Gillote 33, Salinas mechanic, narrowly escaped death last Sunday.

Gilotte was injured when the trail, on which he was walking with several friends, gave way under him and he dropped to the bottom of the canyon. As he went down, his fall was broken by a clump of small redwoods. His left leg was fractured and his right ankle is believed also to have been broken.

Carried on an improvised stretcher, it took his companions eleven hours to take him out of the bottom of the canyon and carry him three miles to the highway. He was removed by automobile to a hospital in Salinas.

Gilotte was on a fishing trip with his brother, Joseph Gilotte. Three other men, Dick Barlow of Monterey, Herman Trott of Pacific Grove and Al Leffingwell of Salinas who were also on a fishing trip, came to Gilotte's rescue.

Leffingwell made splints for the injured man out of bark from a redwood tree while the others went for ropes, medical aid and other assistance. It was night time when they managed to get Gilotte on the highway.

DURHAM PLAY NOW HAS CAST READY

The complete cast of "Yes, Doctor!" Elliott Durham's new musical production to be staged this season at the Forest Theater is now complete and under rehearsal. The first rehearsal on the new Forest Theater stage is scheduled to be held tonight.

Claire Lee, Connie Heron, Allen Knight and several others are playing the leading roles. A chorus of some 40 girls, the largest to have appeared in Carmel, has been practicing steadily for many weeks.

Durham's "Bob" Wins Medal for Heroism

Elliott "Metz" Durham was yesterday presented with a gold medal awarded to his dog "Bob" by the Oakland Tribune-Latham foundation for the most heroic animal in the state of California.

The judges gave the medal to Bob out of 400 entries who sought the first prize. Dogs from all parts of the state were entered in the contest to discover the most heroic dog in California.

Bob's selection as the winner was given in view of two heroic deeds, one which he accomplished at the risk of his own life. Several years ago on the Salinas highway between Salinas and Los Angeles, Durham's car crashed and turned over. The machine, a Ford formerly owned by Durham, burst into flames.

Unmindful of the fire, Bob rushed to Durham's rescue and helped in pulling him out of the wreckage. It was only through Bob's efforts that Durham managed to get out of the burning car.

The second incident occurred but several months ago in the Big Sur district when Durham and a party of friends went on an outing. Durham's foot slipped at the edge of the cliff and he would have gone down but for the efforts of Bob.

The dog jumped to his rescue and helped to hold him up by grasping with his teeth Durham's coat collar. Other members of Metz' party assisted in getting him up.

Awarding of the medal was made following a state-wide survey of the most heroic dogs in various sections. The survey was conducted by the Oakland Tribune and the Latham foundation.

New Stage at Forest Theater Ready for Work

Work on refinishing the top of the Forest Theater stage which was ordered by the directors sometime ago was completed this week and is now ready for use. Several repairs are being made on the dressing rooms and a new coat of paint is being applied.

The directors had hoped to rebuild the entire stage this season but lack of money in the treasury prevented them from carrying out the work. Instead, the top of the stage has been refinished in pine and reinforcements have been placed around it. Cost of all the work will be around $500.

Should sufficient money be obtained from the productions given this season, the stage will probably be rebuilt next year. New seats and installation of water in all of the dressing rooms is also scheduled in next's year's program if sufficient money for work is available.

Carmel Swelters Through Warmest Day for Years

Carmel experienced the hottest day for May during the last ten years last Friday when the mercury climed to 88 degrees, according to figures of the Carnegie Coastal laboratory. Dozens of residents were forced out of their houses and sought relief on the beach.

The warm weather in Carmel was a part of a heat wave which was felt in practically all sections of the state. By Saturday the mercury began to drop and on Sunday a cold fog brought the temperature in Carmel back to normal.

COUNCIL MEETING NEXT WEDNESDAY

A meeting of the city council is scheduled to be held next Wednesday night. Many matters which came up at the last meeting of the council and which could not be taken up because of the absence of City Attorney Argyll Campbell will probably be acted upon at this coming meeting.

GARDEN CLUB MEETS

The Garden Section of the Carmel Woman's Club will hold a meeting at Mrs. Rolf Eskil's on North Casanova, Thursday morning, May 21st. At this time plans for the summer will be made.

At the last meeting of the Garden section, Mr. James D. Bishop of Pacific Grove spoke on "Seeds, Planting and Rotation," and Mrs. W. L. Lawton, Chairman of the National Council for Protection of Roadside Beauty told the members of the progress being made in forming public opinion in preserving scenic beauty, and of actual accomplishments in beautifying the highways.

ON STAFF OF THE BLUE AND GOLD

Thomas C. Warren of Carmel has been elected to Winged Helmet, junior men's honor society at the University of California. Warren has also been appointed junior class representative on the staff of the Blue and Gold, university yearbook. He is the son of Mrs. Bernice O. Warren, Carmelo and Fourth streets.

COMMUNITY CHURCH

Again the "Service Beautiful" will attract many to worship on Sunday morning next. Stressing symbolic beauty and intellectual freedom, the above church cordially urges all to participate in its devotional periods and other various activities. With its catholicity of membership without barriers, the community communion of all shades of belief is gaining the sincere respect of many thoughtful individuals. The Carmel Community Church is preeminently the church of the people and its platform continues to be "We Think and Let Think." Its beautiful order of worship and its ministry of music will appeal to you.

Kindly take note that on the evening of Sunday, May the 24th, Mr. Foster's Glee Club will offer an evening of solo and choral music in the Community Church. Fuller announcement next week.

"SALON FRANCAISE"

Madame Jeanne Pierenne, writer, poet, and author of a method of learning French, intends to organize in Carmel a "Salon Francaise," where lovers of French culture may gather amid congenial surroundings. She hopes to promote the French language and ideals. Madame Pirenne is related to the Belgian historian, Henri Pirenne. She is seeking a home in Carmel, or an associate locally acquainted, who would offer her house, and work with her. —Adv.

YOUNG MEN TAKE OVER THE PARK GARAGE

The Park Garage has been taken over by H. Glenn Henderson and George R. Young, and will be conducted as a storage garage, service station and repair shop in a thoroughly business-like manner. Henderson, who has been with Buick's service for the past eighteen months, has had many years experience in the business. Young, until recently with Carmel Taxi Co., knows cars thoroughly. They are active and aggressive young men, and intend to build up a big business.

Under the new management, the Park Garage will handle Hancock gas and Texaco oil.

PLANS NEARLY READY FOR SUR BRIDGES

Plans for the two bridges on the Carmel-San Simeon highway are almost ready for approval and bids for the work will probably be advertised in another two weeks, according to word received here.

Work on the two projects will start after the contracts have been awarded and it will take 15 months before they are completed. Funds for the bridges were transferred from a grading appropriation at the request of Monterey peninsula leaders who felt that the bridges were of more immediate importance than the grading.

SUNSET SCHOOL PUPILS SHOW ART ABILITY

The various grades of the Sunset School gave an exhibit of their art work at the auditorium of the school last Wednesday night, and a large number of parents and friends of the youthful artists was on hand to mark progress. Black and white, pastel and water colors were shown, together with clay, wax and soap modeling, salt relief maps, ceramic work, book binding, and wood working.

The walls of the large room were covered with the display, all of which was excellent, some of which showed decided talent, and the advantage of careful instruction. There is no doubt but that the past year in the school has given a bold impetus to art, especially in the upper grades. Some of the color work was remarkably fine.

The school orchestra gave music for the affair, and the evening was enjoyable.

MEETING HELD BY EDUCATORS

Several prominent educators from this section met at Highlands Inn last Saturday to attend a session of the Association of Deans and Counselors of the coast counties. Final chapters of the counselor's manual now being published in the California Quarterly were discussed at the meeting.

One of the chapters of the book was written by A. S. Hastings of the Monterey High School and a resident of Carmel. Dr. Nicholas Ricciardi, chief of the division of secondary schools for the state department, presided at the discussion.

STEFFENS EXPECTED HERE NEXT WEEK

Lincoln Steffens, whose autobiography just recently published is creating considerable discussion throughout the country, is scheduled to return to his home in Carmel next week, it was learned today. It was not stated whether Mrs. Steffens was coming back at the same time.

OPENING OF ASTON KNIGHT EXHIBIT

The afternoon of Wednesday, May 20, between the hours of two and five, marks the opening of the Aston Knight exhibit of landscapes of Normandy and California, in the Denny-Watrous Gallery. Mr. Knight will be present for the afternoon of the opening, and the public is invited in to see the paintings and to meet the artist.

Aston Knight's recent exhibit in the Legion of Honor Palace in San Francisco, has attracted wide attention, and much favorable comment. Mr. Knight's studio and work in Paris are known by all who follow the world of art. The exhibit in the Denny-Watrous Gallery will continue until May 31.

FREE EXAMINATIONS

Free physical examinations for children entering kindergarten or the first grade at Sunset School in the fall will be held in Miss Wallace's room at the school on Friday, May 22 from one until five o'clock. Dr. Margaret N. Levick and Dr. Horace Dormody will be the examining physicians.

The Summer Round-up of the children is held each year under the auspices of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers. It is a campaign to send to the entering grade of school a class of children 100% free from remedial physical defects.

If you have a child entering, please make an appointment in advance by calling Mrs. Howard Hatton, 932-W, or Mrs. Ernest Bixler, chairman, 839-J. If you would like transportation it will be given gladly. For that service call Mrs. D. L. Staniford, 952.

ENGAGEMENT OF FORMER CARMELITE ANNOUNCED

Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Hughson of 3419 Kerchoff Ave., Fresno, have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss. Helen Hughson, to Arthur D. Bragg, son of Mrs. Everett B. Bragg, now a resident of Carmel.

Miss Hughson graduated from the University of California, and is a member of the Pi Beta Phi Sorority.

Mr. Bragg is a graduate of Stanford University, and a member of the Sigma Nu Fraternity. He is representative of the General Electric Company in the San Joaquin valley. The young people will make their home in Fresno.

PRIMITIVE CONDITIONS PRESERVED IN HILLS

A tract containing 45,524 acres back in the mountainous country of the Forest Reserve, where the Carmel river and the Big Sur have their beginnings, has been set aside by the United States government, through its Forest Service, as a "primitive area." In this area there will be no permanent improvements made, and except for the trails and roads necessary for fiire protection and odministration, the lands will be left as nature made them.

This Ventana tract of the Monterey county section of the Santa Barbara National Forest is in rough country, with elevations of from 1200 to 4800 feet above the sea, and has some of the finest hunting and fishing in the state. It will be kept free from incursion by automobiles, and made difficult for the ordinary tourist. Only by packhorse or burro, in the true pioneer method of travel, may one get to this "primitive area."

This is only one of sixteen tracts in California, embracing 1,744,412 acres, and including selected parts of the National Forests in the Sierras and Coast Range, that have been designated by R. Y. Stuart, chief of the U. S. Forest Service, for "primitive areas." In announcing the new policy, Stuart says:

"The recreational resources of the national forests of California are being utilized to such an extent tht some action must be taken to provide areas where truly natural conditions can be found. Much of what a few years ago was wilderness is now given over to highways with summer resorts, auto camps and gas stations. The camper who desires a vacation in the real wilderness will now be assured of vacation grounds where environmment, transporation, habitation and subsistence are almost the same as when the first white settlers came to California."

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Mortals and Immortals" will be the subject of the Lesson-Sermon Sunday, May 17, in all Churches of Christ Scientist, branches of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass.

The citations which comprise the Lesson-Sermon will include the following from the Bible: "Thou hast dealt well with thy servant, O Lord, according unto thy word. Thy hands have made me and fashioned me: give me understanding, that I may learn thy commandments. Let thy tender mercies come unto me, that I may live: for thy law is my delight" (Ps. 119:65, 73, 77).

The Lesson-Sermon also will include the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Immortal man was and is God's image or idea, even Mind, and immortal man is co- the infinite expression of infinite existent and coternal with that Mind. He has been forever in the eternal Mind, God; but infinite Mind can never be in man, but is reflected by man. The spiritual man's consciousness and individuality are reflections of God" (p. 336).

It is a pleasure and a privilege to extend a cordial endorsement of the annual Buddy poppy drive as conducted by Veterans of Foreign Wars. Every American should welcome this opportunity to honor the comrades who have made the supreme sacrifice for our Flag and Country, and carry out the slogan of the Veterans of Foreign Wars

"Honor the dead by serving the living"

The V. F. W. Buddy poppy sale is especially commendable because the entire proceeds go for welfare work. The disabled veteran in the hospital is enabled to help himself, the Department is enabled to carry on special work in hospitalization and compensation. The deceased veteran is assured of a military funeral, and the local post is provided with a welfare fund for the benefit of local charities, regardless of race, creed, color, or affiliation. The widows and orphans of veterans are cared for at the National home established and maintained by the V. F. W. at Eaton Rapids, Mich. So let us all join together to

"Honor the dead by serving the living"

24 Hours A Day

By Herbert Cerwin

Since Carmel was established the postoffice has been the centralized meeting place of most residents. Here the news and gossip of the village goes back and forth.

Any one standing inside the postoffice several hours can tell almost accurately how an author is doing. Thin envelopes are greeted with a smile as the check is examined; fat envelopes are met with a frown as the rejection slip is found.

Despite the fact that there are only three mail deliveries in Carmel daily, residents can be seen going six and even ten times a day to the postoffice.

Should the postoffice boxes ever be taken away, it will result in utter tragedy for many of the residents. The three daily trips to the postoffice have become part of their lives; they would seldom go up town if it was not to get the mail.

To many the postoffice box key has taken the place of the wedding ring.

Peter B. Kyne's famous "Cappy Ricks" stories were not fashioned after Captain Robert Dollar. Kyne has never taken the time to deny it, for Captain Dollar and he have always been close friends.

Cappy Ricks was actually a character who worked in Eureka long before Kyne started to write. In fact Kyne and Cappy Ricks worked together for the same firm. Later Kyne based many of his stories on the experiences Cappy Ricks had lived through.

Before Vicki Baum wrote "Grand Hotel," the play which is breaking all box office records in New York, she worked as a chambermaid in a Berlin luxury hotel 13 hours a day. She had to clean 40 rooms a day. Perhaps that is why her play is the cleanest on Broadway this year.

Earl Derr Biggers' story, "Charlie Chan Carries On," which was shown this week at the Carmel Theatre was given this title by the editors of the Saturday Evening Post. Biggers' original name was "Murder Around the World." The Post refused to allow the word "murder" to appear as a title for one of their serials.

Cooper to Tour Coast

Charles Cooper is being booked for an extended concert tour covering the entire Pacific Coast by the National Broadcasting Company's Concert Service, of New York City. Mr. Cooper's master classes in San Francisco have been well attended by advanced pupils, pianists and teachers from all parts of the country.

Katherine Peeples, American founder of the Austro-American Conservatory at Mondsee, Austria, invited Mr. Cooper to join the faculty which includes some of the foremost musicians in Europe. The conservatory only holds sessions in the months of July and August.

If Mr. Cooper accepts the invitation to go to Mondsee, he will return here in the fall to fill concert dates and resume teaching.

Charles Cooper

It makes one feel proud of the village to think such pianists as Charles Cooper and Richard Buhlig consider it a feather in their caps, to come here and play. Even the great Gieseking has favored us twice out of a mere handful of appearances on the coast.

A small but enthusiastic audience greeted Charles Cooper in Edward Kuster's Studio Theatre of the Golden Bough last Saturday night, and made up in applause what they lacked in numbers. Temperamentally Charles Cooper leans toward the poetic and lyric, though when the occasion demands he rises to some very vigorous and effective climaxes.

The Beethoven Thirty-two Variations, first on the program, revealed the performer's technical finish, clean staccato and accuracy. But emotionally the performance was somewhat colorless—the pianist had not warmed to his task, as he did splendidly later.

The Gluck-Saint Saens Caprice was beautifully and poetically given and the audience responded energetically. The Caprice served as an exquisite forerunner to the great Schumann Symphonic Etudes, which marked the high spot in the evening for me. The theme, written by Schumann's wife, Clara Wieck, herself a famous concert pianist of her day, recalls an amusing incident. When Frau Schumann introduced her husband to an old admirer, the latter inquired with interest—" and is your husband musical, too, Frau Schumann?"

The twelve Etudes, beginning with Clara Wieck's theme, end with one of the most brilliant compositions in piano music, with the Marseillaise for its theme. Ever since their publication, these studies have been regarded as the last word in technical difficulty. Thirty-five years ago it was considered a stunt to play them, and they seldom appeared on recital programs. Today you hear them on two out of five programs. Has the art of piano playing progressed?

Charles Cooper stressed the musical rather than technical element in these great compositions, offering us color, contrast, and above all, the composer's message. As he approached the more brilliant studies, Mr Cooper revealed considerable dynamic vigor, and technically the etudes were well within his grasp. He was deservedly recalled a number of times, but wisely refrained from an encore after so taxing a number.

The Chopin group was notable for the pianist's playing of the opus 25 No. 12 Etude, stirring arpeggios over a trumpet-like theme in the lower register. It was obviously military music, and so stirringly performed the audience demanded a repeat. The Fountain of Acqua Paola by the American composer, Griffes, (who had the misfortune to die just as his work had come to a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra), was played with the delicate touch of splashing water. No wonder its mood lingered pleasingly! Liszt's Rhapsodie No. 12 proved again the pianist's ability to play brilliantly. The audience, reluctant to leave, called for encores, and three were generously given.

HENRY COWELL MUSICAL SCIENTIST

On Saturday evening of this week, May 16, Henry Cowell gives his lecture recital in the Denny-Watrous Gallery. The subject is "The Folk Music of Oriental and Primitive Peoples," which will be illustrated by rare records of Java, Bali, the American Indian, etc. At the conclusion of the lecture, Mr. Cowell will play a group of his own compositions.

Among the young modernists, there are few who have such claim to distinction as Henry Cowell. Cowell's attack is consistently modern because it is consistently scientific. His "tone clusters," the "playing with his elbow" which in the past excited so much comment, his rhythms, his inventions—he has just invented a rhythmical instrument—all are based on fundamental acoustical and physical principles. Consequently, his music and his talks have always interested the layman tremendously, inasmuch as they at once feel a common ground of understanding. The modernist in music must be as definitely scientific as the modernist in architecture, and so it is the Cowell audiences in New York this last year have been made up of engineers, architects, draughtsmen, designers, dancers, scientists, as well as musicians.

MODERN GERMAN DANCE SUBJECT OF TALK

Ann Mundstock, schooled for many years by Laban, the same great master under whom Mary Wigman trained for ten years, visited Carmel last week. She was prevailed upon by a group of friends to return on Saturday, May 23rd, when she will give a brief talk at the Studio Theatre of the Golden Bough on the principles underlying the modern German dance, with demonstrations by several of her San Francisco pupils who will drive down with her. Following this, Edward Kuster will read the first act of "Marriages Are Made In Heaven," the brilliant Reinhardt comedy which the Kusters attended in Berlin in the winter of 1928 and which Kuster subsequently translated and adapted for the American stage. The play will be given its premiere in the English language during Fourth of July week at the Studio Theatre of the Golden Bough.

"THE QUEEN'S HUSBAND" TO OPEN SEASON

Samuel Ethridge, Peter Stuart Burk, Dick Collins and Charles McGrath, all well-known players of the peninsula, have joined the cast of "The Queen's Husband," which will be given three performances at the Studio Theatre of the Golden Bough at Memorial Day week-end.

SUMMER PLAY SEASON

Following "The Queen's Husband" at Memorial Day week-end, the Studio Theatre of the Golden Bough will offer the following plays: "Marriages Are Made In Heaven," July 2, 3 and 4; the comedy version of "Karl and Anna," August 6, 7 and 8; and one of several new comedies, to be selected by the season subscription group for production September 3, 4 and 5.

VASIA ANIKEEFF

On May 30, Saturday evening, the Denny-Watrous Gallery will present Vasia Anikeeff, Russian basso. Anikeeff was born in Kaluga, Russia, and was a pupil of the famous teacher, Grenzebach, of Berlin.

Anikeeff has a native capacity for interpreting the Russian folk songs, and his voice is as though bestowed by the gods for just such singing of the joys, the sufferings, and the experiences of the "folk" of Russia—the songs of his people.

Mrs. L. E. Gottfried and son, Hugh of Malin, Oregon, are spending several weeks with Mrs. F. R. Bechdolt. Freer Gottfried, who has been attending the local school and has been staying with Mrs. Bechdolt, will return to Malin with his mother and brother.

So Sweet of Him

Anthony Fokker, the airplane builder, is still a tough egg to get from the sky. During the war his machines were pretty bad news, and now the Department of Commerce is trying to get his busses out of the air for some kind of inspection and he is arguing about it.

It would be so nice of Mr. Fokker to chum up with the United States Government and play ball. Coming over here after the late lamented conflict and grabbing the gravy and then making faces at big Uncle Sam when asked to do this or do that is just a bit thick.

High Finance

A really fine legend exists about the Forest Theater and the perfect crime which was pulled during one of the years-ago shows.

A man slipped over the fence and worked his way to a good seat. He saw the whole show, and so much of a dramatic critic was he that he promptly forgot how he'd entered the theater and gave his attention to roasting the play, the cast, the producer and all other adjuncts. Naturally he gained hearers, who thought that he was at least a San Francisco critic, and somebody suggested that if he disliked it so much, why didn't he ask for his money back?

"I'm going to do just that, my friend," and he went out and did so, with all the indignation of a righteously aggrieved patron.

No wonder the drama has had its ups and downs.

Up Town and All Around

One of the most interesting and versatile of Carmel's personalities was discovered last week by the Pine Cone. His name is Peter Stuart Burk, recently married to Virginia Laurel Harris and owner of the Carmel Drug Store on Ocean Avenue. Mr. Burk came to Carmel two years ago to write short stories. Seeking seclusion, he purchased a place in Garapatos Creek, fifteen miles south of here where his nearest and only neighbor was more than a mile away. During his frequent trips to town he met Miss. Harris to whom he became engaged last fall. Then deciding that they needed a more staple income than that provided through his literary work, they purchased the Carmel Branch of the Palace Drug Co., and re-named it the Carmel Drug Store.

Peter Burk was the first in the British Army to enter Jerusalem during the capture of that city in 1917. At the age of seventeen he enlisted in the British cavalry, just twenty nine days after England declared war against Germany. His first service was in the Libyan Desert against the Grand Sennusi and his bands of wild Arabs of the Sahara. Later he went with his regiment to the Dardanelles and saw service on Gallipoli as an infantryman. After the evacuation of this most deadly of battle fields, his regiment was remounted and sent against Turks in Palestine. After more than a year of desert warfare the army approached Jerusalem and Burk with a handful of troopers, acting as advance guard to the cavalry, galloped into the Holy City with drawn swords. The natives who had been anxiously watching the advancing army from their hills above welcomed them with open arms, shouting greetings in a dozen different tongues. Some time afterwards, while on patrol eastward from Bethlehem in the wilderness where Sodom and Gomorrah are supposed to have stood, Burk with his troopers stumbled upon the ancient monastery of Mahsabah where they were received by the aged patriach and royally entertained. As Burk signed his name in the monk's book he noticed that the last signature was dated 1906 and was that of a famous English statesman.

A few months after this Burk's regiment was relieved, their mounts turned over to the Indian cavalry and they, themselves, transfered to France as Machine Gun Corps. It was at the time when General Haig said "our backs are against the wall." Burk tells us the men expected the war to last "forever," that none of them expected to come out of it alive, but all were certain England would win in the end, and that never once in their experience was the morale of the British Army shaken. "We'd been in it so long," said Burk, "that we became, I think, almost torpidly indifferent to what happened to us. Shortly before the armistice, we began to hear rumors and to sense something in the air, and all of us seemed to take on new life. We took no more chances, we avoided every possible risk—all of a sudden we wanted to live to see it through."

After the war Burk took an extended holiday and toured China and Japan. Returning to London later, he obtained a position with the Societe Financiere, a large French and English company managing rubber estates in the East Indies, and went to Kuala Lumpor, in the Federated Malay States, as Assistant Manager of their office there. When the bottom fell out of the rubber market in October 1920, many old established companies were threatened with bankruptcy, and business conditions throughout the East Indies sank to the lowest level ever known. Many of the wealthy Chinese merchants were involved, and in obedience to tradition which requires every good Chinese to settle his obligations before Chinese New Year, committed suicide when they found themselves unable to do so.

Many of the thousands of Chinese coolies, laid off from the rubber plantations, turned to banditry, and made Signapore so unsafe that the Government issued warnings to the effect that anyone proceeding beyond the police-patrolled area of the city did so at his own risk. Many of the natives, more especially those of the wealthy class, met their death at the hands of Chinese bandits during this period.

Thinking to occupy his time profitably while waiting for the rubber market to re-establish itself, Burk went to the South Seas and leased a cocoanut plantation in Tahiti and recruited a small band of natives to work it. This, however, was not easy. He found conditions in Tahiti almost as bad as those in Signapore, the price of corpa having fallen to one-quarter its previous market value, and no market at all for pearl shell. In spite of the general pessimism and the refusal of the natives to work for him at first, he managed with tact and kindness to get a few men together. "I used to call at their huts about five o'clock every morning," said Burk, "and after I had three or four of them we'd go to a small corrugated iron shack kept by a Chinaman, and I'd give them their breakfast of black tea, and dry bread. After that they would usually follow me into the plantation and work with me for a few hours." With these tactics Burk was enabled to work the plantation and eventually produced a fine crop of copra which he was able to sell to an American company at a good profit. After about nine months of the South Seas, with conditions in Signapore showing no signs of improvement, Burk decided to come to America. Arriving in San Francisco he went almost immediately to Los Angeles, where he lived until coming to Carmel. For several years in Los Angeles, Mr. Burk was head of the sales department of a large manufacturing concern until he organized a company of his own to handle a new type of thermostatic regulator for heating systems, but a growing desire to write, fostered through many years, finally caused him to sell out his interest and come to live in Carmel. "Now I'm back in business again," said Burk. "But I hope soon to be able to write a few hours every day."

Unlike most writers, Mr. Burk is a successful business man with world experience. In a few weeks, he and Mrs. Burk, who is a registered pharmacist, have more than trebled the stock of their store, and greatly enhanced its attractiveness and the service it offers.

Mrs. Kent Clark and her mother Mrs. Ira Miller motored down to Carmel for a few days at the Clark Home on San Antonio. They will spend the coming summer at Carmel.

...She'd have her mother cook with ELECTRICITY

"RIGHT NOW when I need the most care and attention, mother should spend almost all her time with me.

"But just when I want her, she has to be in the kitchen. If she would only let an electric range cook her meals and daddy's automatically, she wouldn't need to stay in the kitchen —she could be with me."

It's easy to have perfect cooking without the usual bother of watching in the kitchen—when you cook with electricity. And that's because of the time and temperature controls. You simply place the food in the oven, say at one o'clock, and set the controls. At three o'clock the meal starts cooking. At six, the electricity turns off. The insulated oven keeps the food hot until you are ready to serve it. Think how nice this will be when company is coming for dinner on a day when you want to be free during the whole afternoon.

Then too, cooking with electricity is economical. The cost for current averages 1c a meal per person. Moreover, cooking elements are faster today—as fast as you'd want them.

A small down payment places the electric range of your choice in your kitchen, ready to use. Come into our office or a dealer's store and see the beautiful new electric ranges.

Criminology Employed To Test Old Masters

How the application of the same principles of criminology to paintings will in the future be used for testing the authenticity of old masters was disclosed this week by Edward O. Heinrich, famed Berkeley criminologist during a short visit here.

According to Heinrich, microscopic examinations of paintings show the strokes of one artist to be the same in all his work. If the authenticity of an old master is doubted, by comparing the strokes of it with another painting by the same artist, positive proof can be given as to whether or not it is genuine.

Heinrich explains that the same methods employed to determine a forgery or faked handwriting can be used to some degree in comparing the artist's strokes in a painting.

"No matter how good a forger a person may be, microscopic examinations will reveal that the writing is forged," Heinrich adds. "This also will be found in attempting to decide whether or not a painting is genuine."

This is the first time that the methods used in criminology have been applied to art, Heinrich while not yet giving out any definite information on the subject, made a long study while in Europe last Fall.

Heinrich spent many days in visiting the art galleries in the leading art centers of Europe. Here he was able to test his theory of "strokes" by comparing various authentic pictures.

In the last ten years, Heinrich has gained an international reputation as a criminologist. In his laboratory in Berkeley he has solved hundreds of problems and dozens of murders which have been hopelessly given up by detectives. For it is only when the police, stalled and perplexed, are unable to reach the solution of a crime that Heinrich comes in.

To this man alone lies the bulk of the credit for the capture of the D'Autremont brothers after they had exploded the Siskiyou tunnel in Oregon, held-up a train and murdered three trainmen and a mail clerk, who was burned alive.

The bandits in fleeing, had left behind several articles, including a knapsack and a pair of grimy overalls. From these articles, Heinrich found enough minute evidence to give exact description of the three slayers.

By the size and cut of the overalls, he determined the height and probable build of the owner. Under the left hand flap there were deposits of pitch, showing that the man had taken off his clothes with his left hand and therefore was left-handed.

From one of the buttons Heinrich had taken one or two hairs that had become caught there in the course of dressing and undressing. The hair was magnified and compared with standard tables showing the different conditions of human hair at various ages. He deduced the criminal to be 25 years old!

From the knapsack four grains of rock salt were obtained. It told Heinrich that the bandits had made their rendezvous at some cattleman's ranch. Detectives were sent out and such a place was found five miles from the tunnel. In the cabin was discovered a towel and some items belonging to a magneto. The towel under the microscope revealed cuttings of hair and other shaving marks from three faces.

Out of what had appeared to be a clueless crime a trained scientific mind constructed a picture of the bandits which had led to their arrest in three different parts of the country.

But this is only one of the hundreds of cases Heinrich has solved. From his laboratory he recently cleared a taxicab driver of suspicion in a murder case. The driver, in face of opposing testimony, claimed he had but defended him against assault by a passenger. A blackjack was found and on it Heinrich discovered a human hair and proved that it belonged to the head of the driver and that he had been attacked.

And then there was the crime of the chemist, Henry Schwartz. Schwartz sought to be judged a suicide by leaving the body of a murdered victim in his office and destroying the place by explosion and fire. But Schwartz during the process of his crime had literally left his card behind. Heinrich found the necessary clue, Schwartz was traced and just about the time detectives knocked at the door of where he was hiding, a shot was fired. Schwartz had ended his own life.

The needle, Watson! Sherlock's not dead!

GEESE!

What is it desirable newcomers like about Carmel? "Desirable" does not necessarily refer to the 100 families brought here by Carmel's skeleton-in-the-closet Chamber of Commerce. Of them we have no data.

Peter C. Lutkin, nationally famous musician, liked our streets without names where he could "lose" himself. Others have enjoyed the trails through the woods, the quaint houses tucked away in shrubbery, our crooked lanes, the absence of house numbers, the lack of a "great white way" of lights on Ocean Avenue, our "sidewalks"—sometimes mere paths, sometimes pre-empted by trees, with occasionally just a few feet of real pavement. On a return drive from San Francisco, what joy to strike Carmel's rustic lanes again! It takes one back to his childhood days!

Nathaniel Hawthorne's niece noted these things, and wrote eloquently of Carmel in a national magazine. How many great city dailies have bestowed extravagant tributes upon our village's (as yet) unspoiled simplicity and loveliness! Even our near neighbor, Pacific Grove, pays homage to Carmel's appeal, and recognizes the great difficulty of keeping it unspoiled. Says the Grove at High Tide: —"the great and near great flock to Carmel as to no other place. And all their camp followers come, too. — — Carmel gets solid returns in hard dollars and cents for being out of the ordinary. Of course the village across the hill finds it hard work to be different. There are people with "Main Street" minds and outlook on life in Carmel as well as in any other town. There is a price that comes with the attainment of individuality, but it is well worth paying."

It is, indeed, well worth paying! And what organization may we trust to save Carmel? What commercial organization was ever free from "Main Street" minds? They tell us that this or that person, unable to get this or that consideration from Carmel's governing body, left town in a huff. For every one like this, there are a score who gladly put up with lack of street labels, bumpy roads, and what not. Why, to see as unique a place as Carmel, thousands flock to Europe and endure living conditions, compared with which, Carmel is a paradise of modernity.

Suppose "Main Street" minds were to have their way with Carmel—visualize Carmel with a board walk, public bath house, with Gonzales pavements, King City white way, sidewalks, uprooted trees and straightened residence streets—what would this nation from coast to coast say of Carmel? It would ignore us and promptly forget that we ever existed. And we, poor fools, would (as Delos Curtis aptly puts it) "slay the goose that laid the golden eggs."

LOST MONEY

In considering a city hall for Carmel, we assume that the primary reason for such a structure is to save rent. Why pay rent, says the economist, when we can own our own building? Rent, of course, is absolutely lost. Every month, the city has to pay out $90 for its council chamber and offices above the postoffice. $1080 a year. Just lost money!

But there are other kinds of lost money besides rent. Interest, for instance. Nobody expects to get anything but receipts for his interest payments. Should we build a $50,000 city hall, bonding ourselves to do it, we should have to pay interest. $3,000 a year, probably. Lost money.

Another kind of lost money is depreciation. The minute you own a building, depreciation begins. Some figure as high as five percent a year for depreciation, but if repairs are kept up nicely, that is rather high. Say three percent, or $1500 a year. Lost money.

Repairs, though, are lost money when you are figuring ownership of a building. Repairs and upkeep. $1000 a year is little enough to allow for the item on a city hall. $1000 more of lost money.

The conservative owner of a downtown building figures to gross 14 percent on rents to make his investment safe. The city might get by at 12 percent, not needing to make any profits on the job of ownership. That's $6000 a year. When the annual rental of Carmel's housing reaches $6,000, Carmel should begin to think of building a city hall for the sake of economy.

$1080 is a long way from $6000. The difference would be all lost money. Carmel is not so prosperous that it can throw away $4,920 a year for the doubtful pleasure of seeing its own structure, housing its officers and council, upon its main street. Economically, the proposition isn't good. Artistically—

We have seen a great number of city halls in a great number of American towns and cities, and have yet to find one where the beauty of the neighborhood has been enhanced by the structure.

FROM THE SHADOWS

Clear you call above the grasses
Where the lonely river passes
  Gently, but she cannot hear—
Thrush of twilight, lark of morning,
Quail of noon whose crystal warning
  Tells of one who wanders near.

Ever out across the valley,
Veering hawk or swallow sally
  And the snowy gull goes free.
Pine and poppy, sage and willow,
Silver foam and azure billow,
  Wait us, but she cannot see.

Wind of autumn, hush of dreaming,
Star of evening westward gleaming,
  Still you haunt me from the Past.
Voice of ocean, sadly calling,
Still you haunt the days befalling
  And the days that could not last.

From "Sails and Mirage"
by George Sterling

"LAS MANANITAS"

(The "Dawn Song" ended all the old California dances)

For the last time the "Dawn Song" has been sung,
The last "adios" been whispered. Down the night
The dancers all have scattered, and the hall
  Stands empty of delight.

No more "Las Mañanitas" wistfully
Sighs its low notes of love entwined with pain
Of parting. Other songs in turn will rise;
The little "Dawn Song" will not sound again.

Handfuls of bright confetti heap the floor,
After an hour of dancing and delight
Forgotten by the silenced singers gone
  Into the night.

—Susan Myra Gregory.

ESSENTIALS

Air, water, and fire
  Shelter, love, and food,
These are the things to fight for,
  The things that are always good.

Book, music, and picture,
  Law, altar and creed
Are only bowls we fashion
  To hold the things we need.

—Claribel Weeks Avery
in The Harp.

REPLETE

Now let the rain come thundering in
To parched and sterile lands,—
While I am filled whose palms have been Touched by her hands.

Now let the sun break through the ploughed
And harried field of skies,—
For we have stabbed the final cloud
When eyes met eyes.

Now let the smile of heaven increase
In a golden aureole,—
For I have found the ultimate peace
Within her soul.

AS SUMMER COMES

Glance over the program of entertainment that Carmel offers this summer. It would make Boston envious, and would be impossible for any other city, even twenty times as big as Carmel, anywhere in America.

The Summer Festival of Music, with the Brosa String Quartette of London, in four concerts at the Studio of the Golden Bough, would in itself make a memorable summer for any music lover. It is only possible for Carmel because Carmel is what it is. However that is only the high spot in a musical season, with the Denny-Watrous Gallery in bi-weekly recitals and lectures, and such eminent musicians as Henry Cowell here. Hardly a week will go by that there is not a really important event in the musical line here in Carmel.

Dramatically, two original plays will be given at the Forest Theater and one Shakspearian comedy, with the best amateur talent on the Monterey peninsula, which means remarkably well performed plays. "Yes, Doctor," a musical melange by Elliott Durham, produced as well as written and composed by him, is a charming laugh provoker; "Love Liar," a comedy by Herbert Heron and Constance Skinner, is romantic and picturesque; "Midsummer Night's Dream," with the real forest for its stage and the pines and oaks its setting, has something that no indoor theatre is ever able to give it.

There is, too, for the summer the schedule of plays at the Studio Theatre of the Golden Bough, Edward G. Kuster's ambitious program for his organization of amateurs. "The Queen's Husband" is already in rehearsal. Other plays selected include Hasenclever's "Marriages Are Made in Heaven," Franck's "Karl and Anna," Rice's "Life is Real." Any one of these plays would mark Carmel as a place of theatrical importance.

At the Carmel Theatre, with every night regularity, are the best of the talking films, with early releases and a perfect equipment. There are many bigger playhouses, but none more comfortable and cozy. Formerly the Theatre of the Golden Bough, and nationally known for its beauty of construction and fitting, it has kept the character intact as a movie house.

Visitors to Carmel this summer will not need to hunt about for diversion, or worry over deterioration of their gray matter through lack of musical or dramatic inspiration. Carmel can give them more and better than they are accustomed to, wherever they come from.

People Talked About

Peter B. Kyne, who dropped into Carmel for a short visit last week-end while attending the horse races at Del Monte, started writing by a mere accident.

Kyne had been in the insurance and brokerage business when he became ill. While he was recovering H. A. Lafler, the editor of the Blue Mule, a small San Francisco magazine came in to see him.

"Well, your know, Harry, I'm going to go into newspaper work when I get out of bed," Kyne said.

Lafler sat up in his chair. "Don't do it, Pete. It will spoil your style."

"Style?" Kyne looked up at him witha grin. "I never knew I had a style."

"Pete, you have never given your writing ability a chance. You are a born story writer. Have you written anything since I saw you two years ago?"

"Huh," replied Pete and pulled out of the drawer a wrinkled manuscript written before he became ill.

Lafler read it. As he finished, he looked up at Kyne and scratched his head.

"Pete, send this to the Saturliday Evening Post, write sixteen more like it and win a national reputation."

Kyne has never refused to try a thing once. So he sent the story to the Post. Two weeks later he had a check for $250 in his pocket. He has been at it ever since.

He wrote a novel in 33 days. He has never rewritten a story in his life. He never spends more than two days on a short story. His advice to aspiring writers is: "NO!"

The Nevada state laws were praised by Samuel G. Blythe, Pebble Beach magazine writer while on a visit to Reno last week, according to a short interview sent over the United Press wires.

Blythe is quoted as saying: "Nevada is the only state left that appears willing to go its own way without bowing to precedent. It is the real exponent of state's rights, something that would probably give Thomas Jefferson a real thrill.

"The gambling situation does not look any different to me than on my last visit to Reno several years ago. I think an exaggerated picture of the situation is being painted."

Frank M. Carr, state senator for some ten years from Oakland and now one of the leading attorneys in California, returned to Carmel last week-end for a short visit.

Senator Carr is immensly interested in Carmel and surrounding territory for several reasons. One of them is that he was the attorney for Judge Carlos Hardy when the Los Angeles jurist was impeached by the senate in the now famous Aimee Semple McPherson case.

When Senator Carr was selected by Judge Hardy as his attorney, the evidence was very much against the superior court jurist. To add to that, the members of the senate who were to hear the impeachment proceedings seemed to be prejudiced against him.

When the first day of testimony opened, Mrs. McPherson, who was to be one of the witnesses in the trial, took Senator Carr to one side:

"Senator," she began, "you know there has been so much notoriety published about me that I would appreciate it if the Carmel incident was not gone into during the trial."

"We'll see what we can do," Senator Carr replied, but explained that it was rather difficult to evade the matter.

"Thank you," Aimee put in. "I'll see Senator that at the end of the trial you are amply rewarded!"

As the impeachment proceedings went under way, there arose no need for the Carmel episode to be given further invetigation. It had no bearing on the charge that Judge Hardy had received an alleged bribe from the evangelist. Consequently Senator Carr dismissed the subject.

In the closing argument, declared to have been one of the finest ever heard before the senate, Senator Carr again did not touch on the Carmel incident.

As he finished the senators left to deliberate on the fate of the Los Angeles jurist. They were out hardly half an hour when they returned.

Judge Hardy had been acquitted!

Congratulations came from all sides. To have obtained an acquittal was indeed a great victory for both Judge Hardy and Senator Carr.

As Senator Carr left the senate chambers he was met by Mrs. McPherson.

"Senator," she said, "I promised you at the beginning of the trial that if you did not mention the Carmel incident I would reward you."

"Oh, that was all right," Senator Carr replied. "You see there was no need to say anything about it."

"Nevertheless, I promised to reward you and I always keep my word," she added and opened up a large purse she was carrying.

"Sorry, but I really can't accept any money," Senator Carr added.

"Money!" Mrs. McPherson smiled. "Of course not! I am going to give you something more wonderful—something that I know you will treasure for the rest of your life."

Out of her purse she brought a neatly wrapped package which she handed to Senator Carr and after thanking him again, she disappeared in the crowd.

When Senator Carr returned to his room he opened up the mysterious package with curiosity. What was there that could be so wonderful?

Inside the wrapper was a copy of the "Life of Aimee Semple McPherson as written by herself."

It was autographed in this manner: "To Senator Carr, in appreciation for all he has done for me."

Eric Wilkinson, writer, now in England after residence here for several years, was mixed up with the British artillery during the war. Like most ex-soldiers, he was content to leave heavy fire-arms alone, but also, like most veterans, he finally got a little hungry to smell powder again. The Gigling Reservation, some few miles from Carmel to the north, is often a range for government cannon fire, and sounds of bombardment may be heard echoing through our seaside skies.

Eric began cocking his ear in the direction of Gigling. A far-off look was in his eyes, and when a couple of old-timers here caught him staring off that direction, they accused him of having at some time cocked a cannon. He confessed that he had. And, under influence of the past, admitted that he knew what it was to be blown up by enemy artillery. The last time he had messed around with artillery, in fact, he had been tossed around by enemy shells.

"Still," he went on, "it might be sort of homelike to stand nearby a battery—"

So that very morning the old-timers, who knew some Presidio officers and were told the day's schedule of firing, took Eric the Ally over the hill to see and hear the guns.

Talk wandered around the world of war on the way, and more and more the past became the present. From the Castroville highway they wandered off a side road into the sandy, sage-brushed hills, and at last came to where salvos of slam-banging came from very near ahead. The road stopped with a temporary encampment of men and horses. A short way beyond were a number of three-inch field pieces, pointing off over the countryside eastward.

Eric stopped talking. He stood looking at the guns, which were being loaded in slow, routine manner by the crews, and then turned to the guiding Carmelites.

"Don't know how the old system's going to react," he said, a fleeting smile tugging at the corner of his mouth. "First time in a long while—" and he started slowly toward the guns.

Final range data came back along the telephone, and the pieces were corrected to the last mil.

Lanyards were jerked. The battery roared and echoes fled over the hills and through the brush, and dust drifted from the firing position.

Eric had hardly moved. He took a deep breath and gave the watching old-timers a broad grin.

"Never felt it!" he said. "I know why. These shells were going the other way."

And that just about sized up the difference between peace and war.

Calvin H. Luther, who lived in Carmel for years, and who, by the way, wrote some of the most expressive and sympathetic descriptive notes about us we have ever had, was one of America's first efficiency experts. Not only did he know values and figures, but he knew and could closely estimate human character. So well could he apply his knowledge that he frequently could tell outright traits and habits of those with him around a fireside, and his sense of humor led him to do this with excellent effect.

One time he was with Elbert Hubbard at the Roycrofters' home town. The talk went to character and handwriting. Luther said that it might even be possible to size up a person, deduce his characterizations and then reproduce his handwriting right before him. Luther knew that it was possible; he had done it, but the effect was better if it were built up.

There was in the room a man whom Luther had just met that evening, and whose handwriting of course he had never seen.

"Can you do his character in his handwriting?" asked the gentle and ever-inquiring Hubbard, a twinkle in those calm eyes.

Luther looked intently at the man.

"I will try." And he rapidly absorbed the other's main points of obvious character; these he built into a whole as best he could in the few seconds at his disposal, and they strongly reminded him of a friend whose handwriting he had analyzed as a key to character a few days before. The rest was relatively easy, knowing as he did the elements of mankind revealed by his writing.

But he apparently went into an intense absorption and then carefully worked out each part of it, now and then gazing intently at the subject in the nearby chair. Finishing, he folded the paper, and asked the man to write a sentence on another sheet of paper, and he dictated the same sentence he had written. Both of the sheets were handed to Hubbard.

Hubbard's face changed from amused toleration to frank amazement. Save for minor differences, both sentences were seemingly done by the same hand.

"Come, come!" said the elated Hubbard. "You must do the same for everyone in the room. This is entirely remarkable."

But Cal Luther smiled and shook his head. He knew when he was well off. A perfect score to remember, and he knew that sometimes even the best intended requests could become disastrous steeplechases—and especially in a thing so full of vagaries as human nature.

Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Brobst of Oakland were the week end guests of Miss Mary Douglass in her home in north Carmel.

WHAT IS IT?

"Guess this one, Tug—" said Lem, tipping back in his chair and resting his feet on the work bench. "What's got three lives—is full o' holes—holds air—an' nails can't puncture?"

"I'd guess a cat—only a cat's got nine lives, it ain't full o' holes, it can't hold air, an' nails CAN puncture it—"

"Guess again—"

"I'd say a automobile tire, if y'd jest said holds air— but no ordinaary tire cud live up t' them thar specifications—"

"Y're right—no ordinary tire cud. But I'll show you one that ain't ordinary that can—"

"What tire's that?"

"Th' new SEIBERLING with three treads—" said Lem, dropping his chair to all fours for emphasis.

"How d' y' figur three lives?" demanded Tug, puzzled.

"Th' life of a tire is it's tread, ain't it?"

"Gues it is—" admitted Tug.

"Well, a tire with three treads has got three lives, ain't it?"

"Yes—but how kin a tire have three treads when there's only room fer one?"

"Because the tire's full o' holes—"

"Whoever heard of a tire full o' holes! That don't make sense!"

"It makes a heap o' sense—" grunted Lem. "Them holes run crossways, horizontally through the casing. They ventilate the tire an' keep it cool, an' make it cushiony an' soft t' ride on. Now listen close. When the top tread wears off, y're down t' th' first row o' holes—an' they form the second tread. If y' live long enough, some day y'll wear down t' th' next set o' holes—them's the third tread—an' a durn good tread they air at that—"

"Yes—it all sounds purty—but 'ow about nails—y' said nails can't puncture it—"

"An' they can't! Say, if a nail ever gets thru a SEIBERLING—an' it's got t' be a durn enterprising nail t' do it—why, th' Puncture Proof Inner Tube keeps any air from gettin' out—"

"Say—Lem—quit y're kiddin' an' show me this miracle y' call a tire—"

"I ain't kiddin'—an' I'll show y' th' tire one one condition—thet y' don't try t' buy this one. I sold all out today an' need this t' demonstrate. Yer set 'll be here in th' morning. Bring yer car around after breakfast an' I'll put 'em on—"

THE VILLAGE NEWS-REEL

An interesting affair in the nature of a farewell party was held last Saturday afternoon at Forest Hill school for Betty and Peter Burtt, who with their mother are leaving shortly for their home in Canada. Mrs. Minna Steele Harper was the hostess of the occasion. The program, consisting of English folk dancing by the school children under the supervision of Mrs. Burtt, was well executed. Mrs. Burtt and her daughter Miss Joyce danced a minuet in costume. An Algerian lullaby composed by Mrs. Root Kern of Carmel was beautifully rendered by Miss Ruth Thurman. At the close of the program, ice cream and cake were served in the pretty green and mauve decorated dining room. The children who participated in the affair were, Patricia Maddux, Patty Shepperd, Joyce, Betty and Peter Burtt, David Frederickson, Audrey and Clara Mawdsley, Diane Knight, Patsy Ball, James Martin, Billy and Virginia Wheeler, Margaret Harris, Harriet Hatton May and Betty Riley and Barbara Buck.

Do You Remember?

. . . When we mined manzanita roots for the winter's fuel supply?

. . . When Dr. Peete's two donkeys and his two-wheeled cart were the only reliable traction power in Carmel?

. . . When Frank Devendorf and Handy stuck into the ground small bits of pine and cypress roots, to make all the thick foliage that is now shading the lands between Carmelo street and the bay?

. . . When we gathered driftwood along the beach into piles, and labeled them with our names, and they were our piles until we called for them and hauled them away?

. . . When William Greer Harrison wielded a mighty axe in the cause of fuel for helpless women and the minister?

. . . When abalones and mussels of our own gathering were important parts of the regular food supply?

. . . When Carmel Point was a vast garden of blue lupine in spring, and of orange poppies in summer?

. . . When Monterey was an hour and ten minutes away from Carmel, passage was by horse-drawn stage, and male passangers had to walk over the last hard pull at the crest of the hill?

Peggy's Promise

Peggy Matson was a pretty little thing, golden haired; complexion fair, velvety smooth, and clear. Her smile—irresistible to men; and her disposition and temperament as enticing as her good looks. How anyone of either sex could help loving her is a mystery. Men flocked to her fireside to woo—and somehow, just before the question was popped, drifted away.

Certain facts had come to their ears—rumors to the effect that Peggy, however desirable, could be relied upon to bankrupt any man who pledged himself to support her. Even a millionaire drew back. "It's as easy to spend dollars by the millions as by the tens, hundreds and thousands—" he gave as his excuse. Thus there were plenty of broken hearts in Peggy's town—such is the power of mammon and the fear of poverty.

Faint heart ne'er won fair lady! And one heart there was that wasn't faint—love had made it bold enough to face any disaster rather than lose the object of its desire. Shortly wedding bells were ringing for Peggy. Fearful and dire were the predictions of former wary admirers, "Poor Tom," they lamented, "his goose is cooked—his business will be bankrupt and his property mortgaged—a sad end for our most successful merchant—"

But month followed month and year followed year, and apparently nothing happened, except that Tom seemed to grow more happy and more prosperous. The village wiseheads were puzzled. One day Peggy overheard her aunt and mother discussing her affairs rather frankly. Naturally she stopped to listen.

"Where does Tom get all the money to support that little waster?" demanded Aunt Mollie.

"I don't know—" said Peggy's mother, with a sigh. "It must be a gold mine—nothing else would answer."

"What's the matter with you two!" cried Peggy, revealing herself unexpectedly. "Tom and I are terribly happy—an' he says business is fine—"

"Very good—but tell me, how does he manage to pay for all the clothing and furniture and art goods and knick-knacks you are forever buying?" asked Aunt Molly.

"I don't know," said Peggy, ruefully. It was a long time since she had been scolded for extravagance—certainly not since her marriage. She hung her head and braced herself for a reprimand, for Peggy was still very young. Her ear caught the sound of a familiar step. Turning, she quickly spied Tom approaching. Her face lighted up at sight of a rescuer.

"Here comes Tom, now—let's ask him about it?"

"No—no!" cried Peggy's mother and aunt, embarrassed. "He might say it's none of our business—we mustn't mention it to him!"

But Peggy disregarded their pleading. "Tom —come here!" she called.

"Hello—everybody!" said the happy husband, stepping up to them—"what's in the wind?"

"Tom—tell mother and auntie why you're not bankrupt and going to the poor house because of my extravagance—"

Tom looked surprised, then laughed heartily. "Everyone thought I'd go broke when I married Peggy, didn't they? Ha—ha, I fooled 'em!"

"How?" demanded the two women, eagerly.

"I made her promise to do her shopping at HOLMAN'S!"
